MASSENET DIES FROM CANCER IN PARIS HOME

Music Influenced by Beauties of Italy and Trage-residence this morning at the age of 70. His death, however, was un-the piano, as the composer described it in after years, they were interrupted by shooting in the streets, which continued for six hours. The French Revolution had begun.

Three years later Massenet was admitted to the plane classes of the Imperial Conservatory of Music. At the and of a year his father's health was such that the family left Paris, but it wasn't long before Massenet's parents onsented to his return to the conservatory. When he was 21 he won the Prix de Rome and went to the Eternal City, where he remained two years, living at the Villa Medici. Of hose two years he always spoke most anthusiastically. It was a new life for him, he said, and he became more than a musician." he became an interpreter of true emotion.

When he returned to Paris, in 1867, he married one of Liszt's pupils. Through the influence of Ambroise Thomas "La Grand Tante" was produced at the Opera Comique. It was apparent then hai Massenet was a skilled musician. Den Cesar de Bazan" was produced a 1872, and five years later Massenet had his first operatic success, "Le Roi lahore." Halanzier, then a director of the Opera, met him on the boule-bard. Halanzier had heard "Marie Madeleine" and "Eve," and he asked Massenet to write an opera. "I have a omplete opera in my drawer at home, Massenet said. The opera was "Le Roi de Lahore." After that Massenet wrote "Heriodiade." "Manon." "Le Cid." Esclarmonde," "Le Magi," "Werther," Thais," "Le Portrait de Manon," "La Navarraise," "Sapho," "Cendrillon," Navarraise." "Sapho," "Cendrillon," "Griselidis," "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame," "Cherubin," "Ariane," "The-"The-

When "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame" was produced by Oscar Hammerstein the Manhattan Opera House, with Mary Garden, there was a good deal of comment, and Massenet's name beame known in this country to many ersons who had never heard of him. Massenet originally had written the pera without a female part. It was duced in Paris with success, but hen the score was changed for Mary Garden, who played "Jean the Jugder." there was some criticism from ris critics.

Massenet also wrote several orchespieces. He was said to be a vealthy man.
